Dear Mr Lindsay,

BPB e-news

You may have noticed the Building Professionals Board is making some changes to the way it communicates with stakeholders.

We're very keen to get on the front foot with our communication and the first step has been to move to an e-news format for the BPB Bulletin, which has traditionally been delivered to subscribers as a link to a lengthy pdf document.

Our new format is shorter, sharper and will link to additional details on the Board's website, the Department of Planning's website and other relevant online sources. It will still contain relevant technical information, including a "Question and Answer" section and important lessons learned resulting from the Board's audits and investigations, as well as insights into the Board itself and the people we represent.

We're keen to get as many subscribers as possible to the e-news, and I invite you to let your members know they can join the mailing list by emailing bpb@bpb.nsw.gov.au with 'Subscribe' in the subject line.

This year, we intend to seek feedback from as many of you as possible on how you want us to consult with you. Your input to our future plans is important and will be called on. This is all part of a concerted effort over the next 12 months to make sure we instigate change that brings about a better system for certifiers – and, through these reforms, a better and safer system for consumers and industry.

Yours sincerely

Sue Holliday
